you are in a group. Don't indulge (放纵) yourself in instant chat when you have just arrived. Examine the situation and the conversation, and then say whatever you think fit. It is better to say something substantial, rather than something meaningless. Don't try to change people. It is not your job to change anyone else. It is not in your power to change anyone else. Let other people love how they want to live. If you do not like the way someone acts, you can try to interact with them as little as possible. You can always maintain a good attitude towards them so that your relationship with them might change.

Keep a smile. A little laughter goes a long way, and a smile eases tensions, whereas a frown can create tensions. If someone teases you, try to laugh it off. If someone is frowning, smile at them. Be mindful of your facial expression. If you are persistently and optimistically, people will cheer up when they see you coming.

Some people do not take hints. Some people do not read body language. For these people, it really works to just say, "I really want us to work well together. I will help you and back you up, and you help me and back me up."
